Khaled, Hussein talk

JEDDAH, Oct. 11 (SPA) - King Hussein of Jordan arrived here Saturday morning on a visit to the Kingdom. He was welcomed at the airport by King Khaled, Crown Prince Fahd, Second Deputy Premier and Head of the National Guard Prince Abdullah. Defense Minister Prince Sultan, the Governor of Mecca Prince Majed and many other senior officials and officers.

King Hussein was accompanied by Prime Minister Mudar Badran, Ahmad Lawzi, head of the royal court, and the Commander in Chief of the Armed Forces. Zaid ibn Shaker.

King Khaled also received Saturday the leaders of several pilgrims' delegations. They included those of Kuwait, Oman, the Philippines and Malaysia. On Thursday the King received the credentials of the new ambassadors of Guinea and Senegal.

ALGIERS, Oct. 11 (Agencies) - A major carthouake devastated the city of Al Asnam and surrounding rural areas Friday, killing at least 20,000 people, according to Red Cross officials in Geneva.

The quake destroyed the city's main hospital, courthouse, civil defense headquarters, a major department store, the central mosque. a girls' high school, two large housing complexes and many other buildings.

The tremors, the strengest measure and on the Kichter scale, were telt in Algic,'s and Oran, to the east and west of Al Asnam, a town of some 125,000 people, and across the Mediterranean in southern Spain. No injuries were reported outisde the Al Asnam area.

Civil and military relief workers were mobilized throughout Algeria. Late Friday night, they were working under floodlights in the city evacuating many injured people, the Algerian news agency APS said.

APS said the quake affected a number of surrounding towns including Ain Defla, El Attaf, Dzebouja, Beni Haoua. El Abdia and Sendjaf, Typically about 10 per cent of the houses and some larger buildings such as mosques and factories were destroyed there. APS said, and at least one freight train was detailed, cutting one line to Al Asnam. Helicopters and ambulances were taking injured to various hospitals in northern Algeria, Blood donations were being sought in several towns, APS said.

Blankets, medicines, doctors and other forms of assistance were dispatched from France, Switzerland, Britain, West Germany, the Netherlands and Tunisia.

The approximate death toll was given in Geneva by the International Committee of the Red Cross, which cited information from the Algerian Red Crescent.

The international body also said that 250,000 people were thought to have been

Threatening Abadan Iraqi troops cross Karun River

. BEIRUT. Oct. 11 (Agencies) - Iraqi troops and tanks crossed the embattled Karun River on pontoon bridges behind a screen of bombing jets Saturday to mount their final assault on Iran's beleaguered oil refining city of Abadan, the Iraqi command reported. A communique broadcast by Baghdad radio said the successful river-crossing operation set the stage for encircling Abandan and seizing the entire Iranian coast of the Shat Al Arab waterway. The operation began Friday night and the crossing was completed on Saturday, the communique said.

Iraq also said Saturday it has broken off diplomatic relations with Syria. Libya and North Korea because they airlifted arms to

A government statement broadcast over the state radio in Baghdad said Iraq ordered the embassies and consulates of the three nations closed in Iraq, giving the Syrian and Libyan diplomats 48 hours to leave. The North Korean mission was given 72 hours to wind up its affairs and leave Iraq, the statement added.

And radio Moscow denied Saturday that the Soviet Union was supplying arms to Iraq through the Jordanian port of Aqaba. It also denied Western press reports that Moscow had offered military aid to Iran in its war with

scramble for new sources

LISBON, Oct. 11 (R) - Portugal, which imported 45 per cent of its oil from Iraq this year, is joining the queue of Iraqi customers — including India — making urgent efforts to try to secure supplies for 1981 from Saudi Arabia and other alternative sources.

"For the next six months, the consumer will not feel any shortage, but if Iraq does not resume its exports we shall have problems, a senior oil industry official said, adding that increased shipments were being sought from suppliers such as Saudi Arabia, Abu Dhabi, Nigeria and Venezuela.

Portugal, which depends on oil for 87 per cent of its energy needs, has more than three months' supply of crude in stock and two months supply of refined products, government sources said.

Nigerian embassy sources said Portugal was asking to buy 1.2 million tons (about 8.75 million barrels) of Nigerian crude after taking delivery of 500,000 tons (3.65 million barrels) under a 12-month agreement signed last Saudi Arabia was Portugal's second biggest oil supplier in 1979, providing 24 per cent of its imports through foreign oil companies. A foreign ministry spokesman said Portugal would open an embassy in Riyadh within the next few months and hoped to arrange direct: government-to-government purchases in the future.

Portugal became heavily dependent on Iraqi oil this year after cutting trade links with Iran in protest at the continued detention of the U.S. Embassy hostages. In 1979 Iran supplied 20 per cent of Portugal's oil. The cut-off in supplies from Iran and Iraq has been aggravated by a halving of oil imports from the Soviet Union this year. In 1979 Moscow provided 10 per cent of Portuguese oil imports.

Oil industry sources said Portugal's reserves had been bolstered by recent purchases of about two million tons (about 14.6 million barrels) of oil at favorable prices on the spot market.

Portugal sent a minister to Mexico and Venezuela this year in its search for new oil supplies and in the long term, hopes to restore oil imports from its former African colony of Angola, with which relations have been strained since independence in 1975.

Portugal is exploring for oil in the Tagus estuary and off its southern Algarve coast. "The prospects are not very encouraging, but every drop of oil is worth the effort. a senior oil industry official said.

Meanwhile, Bulgaria will supply 100,000 tons of crude and fuel oil to India by the end of the year to help cover shortages arising from the war, the United News of India (UNI) said Saturday.

Ardakani told reporters Iran would finally join in Security Council debate on the Iran-Iraq war, which has been boycotted since the debate began in late September.

"Iran will definitely go to the Security Council," he said. A delegation will come from Tehran to back him up. Later he added, "It's quite clear we will present our grie-

Jamal Shemirani, Iran's acting chief delegate to the United Nations, forecast on Thursday that Iran would insist on restricting any Security Council debate to his country's conflict with Iraq and would refuse to discuss the 52 American hostages being held by militants in Iran. Iran previously had ignored Security Council proceedings and refused to accept mediation by the United Nations or the Islamic conference as long as Iraqi troops remained on Iranian soil. In Islamabad meanwhile, Pakistan President Gen. Muhammad Zia ul-Haq said on his return Friday that he was ready to renew talks with Iraqi and Iranian leaders but added

there were no plans to do so yet. "If and when it is necessary, I will not only fly back, I will run (back) for peace," he told reporters.

Zia held inconclusive talks earlier this month in Tehran and Baghdad as leader of a goodwill mission sponsored by the Organization of Islamic Conference. Habib Chatti, OIC's general secretary who accompanied Zia on that trip, was planning another visit to the warring states next week, he said.

Despite the current polarization of attitudes of Iran and Iraq, it was helpful to maintain a dialogue. Zia said. The 56-yearold Pakistani leader said Western leaders agreed that the OIC initiative was the best approach for finding a peaceful solution to the conflict.

During his trip, Zia met with U.S. President Jimmy Carter, British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky and West German Chancellor Helmut Schimdt. He also delivered an 80minute speech at the United Nations as the spokesman of the Muslim world, an honorary

Newsmen told to leave Iraq

BAGHDAD, Oct. 11 (AP) - The Iraqi government, apparently unable to handle the flood of foreign journalists who came here to cover the war with Iran, on Friday ordered all but a select group repressing international news agencies and television networks to leave the country.

A representative of the ministry of information called a meeting of all foreign correspondents and told them that most of them must depart Saturday morning for Amman.

Earlier in the day, government officials tounded up all foreign journalists covering the southern from from Basta and forced them to board a bus to the Iraqi capital about 300 miles (480 kms) away. A few journalists who tried to remain in Basra were seized later Friday and obliged to leave.

Allowed to remain in Iraq, with one correspondent each, are the Associated Press and United Press International of the United States, Agence France Presse and the British agency Reuters. The U.S. television networks ABC. CBS and NBC, the British Broadcasting Corp. French and German television networks and a few others were permitted to keep one representative each

No foreign or news magazine was being permitted to remain, although officials said reporters from those organizations may apply for new visas once they have left the country. Many of the correspondents came her at the invitation of Iraqi embassies around the

Western Somalis back Jihad

JEDDAH, Oct. 11 - The Western Somali Liberation Organization announced its full support for the call to Jihad (holy struggle) initiated by Crown Prince Fahd.

" The WSLF is an army ever ready to fight for the liberation of Jerusalem, a prime Islamic duty," Abdi Shakur Ibrahim, WSLF envoy to Middle East countries, told Arab News Saturday.

Discussing another issue, Ibrahim said a U.S. Senate foreign relations committee report, which accused Somalia of diverting U.S. aid from the Western Somali refugee camps to feed the general population and army troops, is untrue. He said the Somali government divides its own food reserves among the Somali people and the refugees, and doesn't need to take over food earmarked specifically for refugees.

Western Somalia was the western part of Somalia that enjoyed independence until 1887 when Menilik of Abbysinia, then emperor of Shewa, central Ethiopia, conquered the emirate of Harar with the support of international colonialists, according to Ihrahim.

The national struggle of the Western Somalis began in the early 1940's when the Somali Youth League was founded. The league operated in the area until it was crushed by Britain when Italy was defeated in World War II and let go of Ethiopia.

" Some people believe that Somalia generated the Western Somali movement," lbrahim said. The movement against Ethiopia existed before the Independence of Somalia. The Nasrullah Party, established in 1960, started the armed struggle, which the late Ethiopian Emperor Haile Selassie found it enough excuse to attack Somalia in 1963

According to the WSLF official, the organization was developing militarily and was spreading its base among the masses. "We took advantage of Haile Selassie's overthrow in 1974 and sparked the confrontation with Ethiopian forces. The WSLF controlled over 90 per cent of Western Somalia in 1977 before retreating when Russia stepped in backing Ethiopia.

Health situation good

JEDDAH, Oct. 11 (SPA) — Health Minister Dr. Hussein Jazaeri sent a cable to King Khaled Friday saying, "Thanks be to God, the health situation of pilgrims and local people this year is very good."

In his reassurance to the King, Dr. Jazaeri said that hospitals and clinics in Mecca, in the holy places, in Medina and on roads used by the pilgrims are properly equipped by the ministry with men and equipment.

Meanwhile, Public Security Chief Gen. Abdullah Abdul Rahman Al-Sheikh met Friday evening at the Conference Hall in Mecca with the commander and officers of the Pilgrimage security forces, and the participating and support forces (in pil-grimage affairs) and told them to double their efforts. He said, "Pilgrims are the responsibility of everyone of us and we must serve them with utmost honesty. diligence and faithfulness."

to plan Islamic trade center

JEDDAH Oct. 11 - Experts from ember States of the Organization of the amic Conference are holding a three day eeting in Tangiers, Morocco, from October to 15 to discuss the draft statute and organtional set-up of a proposed Islamic center development of trade.

The meeting is being organized by the ddah-based general headquarters of the IC in pursuance of a resolution of the mic Foreign Ministers, and will also be tended by representatives of the Islamic evelopment Bank.

. The meeting is one in a series of conferices planned by the general secretariat to ve shape to various projects and proposals be submitted for approval at the Third lamic Summit to be held in the Kingdom in ecember this year.

According to informed sources, a good deal of planning and effort has gone to crystallize the idea of setting up an Islamic trade center. The need was felt because of the lack of information and exchanges among Islamic countries in the trade and commercial fields. The general agreement on economic, technical and commercial cooperation between member states of the OIC also provides for the setting up of a Trade Center.

The Ninth Islamic Conference of Foreign Ministers held in Dakar, Senegal in April, 1978, first debated this matter seriously and recommended that studies be made on the role and functions and the organizational set-up of the proposed center. The proposal was discussed and analyzed by technical bodies and economic forums of the OIC subsequently.

It is understood that the tenth Islamic conference of foreign ministers, which took place in 1979, welcomed the offer of Morocco to house the administrative headquarters of the center. After further deliberation of the various aspects of the project, and after examining the Draft Statute prepared by Morocco in respect of the organizational set-up of the center, the eleventh Islamic conference held in Islamabad, Pakistan, earlier this year decided that a meeting at expert level should finalize recommendations for establishment of the Trade Center and submit their report for approval to the Third Islamic Summit, the highest body of the OIC. This shows the importance Islamic states are attaching to the center and its early establishment.

It is expected that once the Islamic center for the development of trade becomes operative, it will fill the vacuum presently existing in the Islamic world in the collection of trade and commercial information. As such this development is being keenly anticipated by economic and other observers.

OPEC report notes unique situation JEDDAH, Oct. 11 — As energy consumers. OPEC countries constitute a special group, Saudi Business magazine said, quoting

No established energy analysis readily suits the description of the recent development, nor its expected evolution. This distinctive feature arises not only from a lax approach to the accounting of liquid and gaseous hydrocarbon usage, but also from a feeling of urgency about economic development in a situation where the only abundant resource is energy, the magazine said.

It will naturally take a long time before domestic economic planning begins to take account of the constraint of exhaustibility as a limit to domestic needs. As things stand now, OPEC countries would welcome energy intens. e processes which are thrown overboard by others. Thus, we are examining a phenomenon in its early formation. It is so much in agitated motion that it is hard to describe, let alone to predict its future course. This paper may disappoint those who expect us to describe the future in precise numbers. It shows many solutions that are evidently not feasible or desirable, as some result in OPEC countries being net importers of energy by the turn of the century, while others are unacceptable since they reflect too low an economic growth in a region of high population and very high expectations.

Syria, Soviet Union blast U.S. 'militaristic policy'

MOSCOW, Oct. 11 (AP) - Syria and the Soviet Union have blasted the United States in a joint communique for its " militaristic policy" in the Middle East, but made no mention at all of the Iraq-Iran war.

The communique was issued Friday the day after the conclusion of the state visit by Syrian President Hafez Assad, during which he and President Leonid Brezhnev signed a 20-year friendship pact. The communique said the Syrian-Soviet summit gave " special attention" to the Middle East.

Syria and the Soviet Union " resolutely condemn the United States' militaristic policy in the Middle East and its attempts to strengthen its political and military-strategic positions there and to establish a network of

King Hussein's visit to Moscow postponed

MOSCOW, Oct. 11 (AP) - A state visit by King Hussein of Jordan, originally scheduled for mid-October, has been postponed "for some time," the Tass news agency said Saturday

Tass said the postponement was on "mutual agreement of the sides," and that a new date"will be agreed upon additionally." The agency gave no further details.

There was speculation that the visit may have been postponed because it coincided with a state visit by Babrak Karmal, the Soviet-backed leader of Afghanistan.

joint statement also condemned the increased attempts by the United States to interfere in the internal affairs of the states of the region.

The communique said that the two sides highly assess the historical role of the Iranian reevolution," without making any reference to the conflict between Iran and

The document also included a joint statement of " solidarity " with Afghanistan " in its struggle for its national independence and sovereignty," and a call for an end to" inter-ference" in that country by "imperialist and reactionary forces."

The bulk of the communique spelled out Syrian-Soviet positions on the Arab-Israeli conflict. They "resolutely condemned "Israel, Egypt and the United States for the Camp David accords and the "policy of separate deals.

They blasted Israel for efforts to annex Jerusalem and for the proliferation of Israeli settlements in occupied Arab territories. And they called for an "all-embracing Middle East settlement" that would include complete Israeli withdrawal from all Arab lands occupied in 1967 and participation of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Syria and the Soviet Union also accused Israel of "broadening aggression... against the peaceful Lebanese population and the Palestinian refugees" and of increasingly open and gross interference in the internal affairs of that country.

Afghan refugees' clashes with locals worry Pakistan

ISLAMABAD, Oct. 11 (Guardian) -Clashes now occur sporadically between Afghan refugees and Pakistanis. In the province of Baluchistan, many local tribesmen are angry and concerned that no enough Afghan men are going back to fight the Soviet occupation, but seem instead to be setting in, farming land around refugee camps and generally giving the impression of having come to

A diplomatic source added: "There is evidence that those refugees in this area who do go back into Afghanistan, are simply going to bring back goods to trade."

The situation is different in the northwest Frontier Province, where the bulk of the refugees - and the Mujahideen (Islamic fighters) are found. Frontier Province is both a staging post, and one of the arms routes for the Afghan freedom fighters, but relations between refugees and the locals are becoming equally poor.

International aid experts, working among the refugees, report the existence of local vendettas, and say they fear that Afghan agents provocateurs may be infiltrating with genuine refugees.

In the area around Peshawar, the capital of Frontier Province, independent experts estimate that refugees will soon equal the number of local tribesmen - a significant and worrying trend.

"Frankly, this is not something we pictured happening," a Western diplomat admitted. "The reason probably is because the refugees haven't had their maintenance allowance or rations from the government, and they think that by coming nearer to the center of things in Peshawar, they are more likely to get what is going. They may be right."

The threat to local tribesmen is a basic one: the refugees are competing for water and land. The spread-out areas over which they pitch their tents - uncontrolled by official action - obviously cannot then be used for crops, and Pakistani farmers are unwilling to allow their livestock to graze there. There is also competition for water supplies.

The Pakistani authorities try to play down clashes between locals and refugees as much as possible, and they are usually successful. The local press is subjected to strict censorship by the martial law authorities, and most of the battles, or bomb blasts, occur in tribal areas to which foreigners cannot travel without permission.

But one of the biggest known clashes took place early in July, in the small Baluchi town of Nushki, southwest of the provincial capital, Quetta. It epitomized the grievances of the Pakistanis. Representatives of about 2,500 refugees, camped near Nushki, went into town to collect their usual three-month instalment of international aid.

'If they band together in groups, they are able to have a fair bit of capital behind them." a diplomat explained. "In this case, they went and bought melons and took them into the market. Because they had bigger stocks, they could outtrade the locals. This caused a lot of bad feeling.

"But the catalyst came when one of the local Baluchi men, riding a motorbike, was hit by a truck driven by a refugee. The trouble started from there. "Guns and rifles came out, and shops in Nushki were closed for four days. The official figure is that three people died, but locally, everyone claims the toll was much higher."

The government of Baluchistan acted quickly, and moved all the refugees away to another camp at Panipai, nearer Quetta. Although members of the same tribes sprawl freely across the frontiers between Pakistan, Afghanistan and Iran, the 'extended family" concept has aided assimilation of the refugees in Pakistan only to a

Aid experts say that in the west of the country, some Baluchi refugees have been absorbed into the Baluch community, but

"I went along the road right up to Chaman (a village on the Afghan border) and talked to people in tea shops and villages," an official told me. "In some places, they were openly hostile to the refugees. The feeling of Pathan brotherhood doesn't interest them at

In the Baluch town of Pir Alizai, tension is also running high. "A few weeks ago, refugees came in carrying guns and making the locals uncomfortable," the official said. "Also, some refugees have come across with trucks and tractors which they are using freely for business purposes, whereas a Pakistani who wants to operate a cartage business has to apply for permission and then if he's lucky gets only one specific route."

Military to release Demirel, Ecevit

ANKARA, Oct. 11 (R) - Ousted Turkish Premier Suleyman Demirel and opposition leader Bulent Ecevit, detained by the armed forces after last month's military takeover, will be released Saturday, a military communique said.

The communique mentioned the two big party leaders by name. It added that all other politicians taken into custody after the coup would also be freed saturday "except those whose crimes are being investigated.

Military sources said Demirel and Ecevit would be flown to an air force base here Saturday afternoon from the army garrison in western Turkey where they had been held since Sept. 12.

Most of the 100 or so deputies of the dissolved parliament were also released Saturday morning from Ankara'scentral army garrison and returned to their homes. A few are still detained.

Forty of the 44 deputies of the main opposition Republican Peoples Party (RPP) were freed. All 16 deputies of Demirel's Justice Party, the ruling party before the coup, were

Only one of the 20 or so deputies of the Muslim National Salvation Party (NSP) was released. The others remain in custody. All 17 deputies of the extreme right wing Nationalist Movement Party (NMP) were still in detention.

Those remaining in custody would be charged under martial law regulations for their past political activities, the militare communique said. Turkey's other two main party leaders NMP Chairman Alaslan Turkes and NSP chief Necmettin Erbakan, were flown to a military prison in Ankara two days ago and are being questioned by military prosecutors Turkes and Erbakan, as well as the other deputies still in custody, are likely to face a military trial for "anti-state activities."

In forming trade unions

Polish agricultural peasants take cue from strikers

WARSAW (Guardian) — The tiny village of Zbrosza Duza has a good claim to being considered the Gdansk of Polish agriculture. Over the last month, it has become the focalpoint of attemots by Poland's three million iensants to follow the example set by striking workers and organize themselves into independent trade union.

Unmarked on road maps, outwardly Zbrosza resembles thousands of other Polish rillages. Some 30 miles south of Warsaw, it lies on Poland's sandy central plain. Dominating the flat landscape is a large,

rather ugly, brick church which the villagers built themselves seven years ago after an immense struggle with the Communist authorities. It was here that a meeting was held to launch a new farmers' union in the Warsaw region.

The meeting took place after morning mass. Dressed in their best suits, peasants' delegates from miles around crammed into the crypt beneath the church to give vent to their grievances and sign up as founding members of the independent union. The occasion provided fascinating glimpses not only into the problems of Polish agriculture, but also the crucial role played by the church in first encouraging and then channeling social protest.

The Zbrosza farmers are now leading the new union, but it was a young peasant from Poznan in western Poland who really set the meeting alive. He drew huge appaluse when he remarked: "We are people, not cattle. We are the foundation of Poland - and without us the country would starve."

The thrust of his complaint was that agriculture lies at the heart of Poland's present crisis. The individual peasant farmer, on whom the system depends, is looked down up on by the authorities.

An indignant colleague burst in, "When we ied to talk about our union with local offials, they kept us standing for one and a half ours. Finally they suggested we sit down ut then we refused so that we could gaze own on them from above." This display of mbborness drew loud guffaws from the addy faces around the room.

The farmer from Poznan was corresct. For ne last 35 years, since the Communists came o power, agriculture has been the Achilles' eel of the Polish economy. With its fertile armlands, Poland should be a rich agriculurak country and a net exporter of food to he rest of Europe.

Instead it imports grain, and even meat, on 1 massive scale. Attempts in the early postwar years to collectivize land were resisted and the policy was reversed in 1956 by the hen Polish leader, Wladyslaw Gomulka. Foday private farms account for 80 per cent of Poland's agricultural production. But, largely for ideological reasons, individual holdings have been kept strictly limited in size and are farmed by archaic methods. The inefficient system has been bolstered by huge state subsidies to consumers (amounting to 18 per cent of the total budget).

Low yields have been exacerbated by a series of floods. As a result Poland has had to borrow even more from the West for the import of food and fodder. But this has been insufficient to satisfy consumer, demand. Shortages of basic foodstuffs have caused mounting frustration, finally culminating in this summer's outburst of labor unrest.

Jerzy Gorski is one of Zbrosza's leading private farmers. He has also been involved in peasuats' defense committees — an activity that has resulted in frequent calls to the local police station.

A powerfully-built man, he is unusual in that he does not mind being quoted by name. But his complaints reflect the concerns of the vast majority of Polish peasants.

His farm is 15 hectares is large by Polish standards. His income is around 200,000 zioties a year ($6,500) — and he says that, while he could easily produce more, it is simply uneconomic for him to do so uner the present pricing system.

Sold on the black market, a kilo of meat fetches 200 zlotes (1 dollar - 30 zlotes). But most farmers feel obliged to sell most of their meat through the state cooperative where the price is only 46 zlotes. They do so partly out of fear, partly because for every pig they sell to the state, they are allowed to buy 300 kilos of otherwise unavailable coal.

Gorski estimates that it would only be worth his while producing more meat for a price of between 80 and 90 zlotes a kilo. But that would mean either high prices for the Polish consumer or even larger subsidies. Both these options seen politically unaccept-

But Gorski's major grievance is the difficulty of buying new machinery or essential supplies. He would like to buy sunlamps for raising small pigs, but they are impossible to find. Without influential connectins, Polish tractors can be bought only for dollars - on the black market.

It was the fight to build the church that taught the peasants of Zbrosza Duza how to organize themselves against authority, villagers recall how, in the early seventies, they converted a barn into an illegal makeshift chapel. After three months, the chapel was seized and destroyed by hundreds of police sealed off the village and prevented the peasants from erecting another shrine in its place.

This action provoked a protest from the primate of Poland, Cardinal Wyszinski, who described it as "an unprecedented sacrilege." But it also left people more politcally aware and determined. One villager said he went to Warsaw 52 times to ask permission to con-

Japanese fear whaling ban

By Donald Kirk

TOKYO, (OFNS) - Japan's whaling interests are amassing emotional arguments and scientific evidence to prevent what they fear may be the imminent destruction of their industry by nations anxious to ban

"Why do they want to destroy us?" asked Chichi Ohmura, vice-secretary of the Japan Whaling Association. "Why do they want to stop us from earning our living?"

The plaintive tone of Ohmura's question indicated the sense of fear as Japanese government officials prepared to fight on its behalf at the annual conference of the International Whaling Commission.

"A ban on whaling would be totally unreasonable," said Kunio Yonezawa, deputy director-general of the Fisheries Agency and leader of the Japanese delegation to the commission.

As a bare minimum, he said, the commission should "stabilise the catch quotas," under which Japanese whalers last year caught 5,510 whales, two-thirds of the quota set for the Soviet Union.

The crux of the argument of Japanese whalers is that the number of minke whales is increasing. Japanese scientists estimate 170,000 minke - a relatively small species about 28ft long and weighing three tons are now in the Antarctic, where Japan's lone remaining mother whaling ship and its four catch vessels spend five-and-a-half months a year beginning in Octobe.

The mother ship processed 3,279 minke whales last season, while coastal vessels filled quotas of 1,350 sperm whales, 460 bryde whales and another 421 minke

Japan ate 11,300 tons of whale meat last year, as opposed to 80,000 tons a decade ago, when six factory ships plied the Antaretic and the North Pacific, the latter now completely banned for whaling.

The Japanese, second only to the Russians as a whaling nation, expect only limited co-operation from Soviet delegates to the conference. "The Soviet Union does not send good scientists," said Yonezawa, complaining that Rusian delegates "do not always understand what is going on." He was 'not pessimistic' about the outcome of the conference and said it was too early to consider what Japan would do if the commission ignored its 'scientific arguments' and voted for a complete ban.

MUTUAL DESTRUCTION

As the fighting between Iraq and Iran escalates, the two antagonists have embarked on a systematic destruction of each other's lifeline-oil installations — with the result that by the time the war comes to an end two of the wealthiest Islamic states will have been reduced to penury.

The loss to their own peoples, to the Arab states and the Islamic world is incalculable as it was unnecessary had the two governments been more tolerant of each other. But they were not and the result is the tragedy being enacted at present.

As the two superpowers have shown little or no interest in calling for a ceasefire and a peaceful settlement later on, there is little that anybody else can do to stop the carnage except a concerted effort by the Islamic and Arab states who have a real stake in a peaceful end to the conflict which is bleeding them of some of their best resources. Iran is nobody's surrogate, not after the demise of the Shah, and Iraq is a fiercely independent state and will take orders from nobody.

As such there are grounds to believe that the war will continue especially if both sides can find sources of arms supplies, and, sadly enough, oil, when they run out of their stockpiles very soon.

The mission of the Organization of Islamic Conference had demonstrably failed to impress either side because it started its work at an early stage of the fighting with the Iraqis advancing and the Iranians too deeply wounded to accept mediation before doing something to vindicate their honor. The Iraqis are still advancing but the Iranians have not been defeated and all is not lost as far as they are concerned. Theirs is a big country with substantial resources and the army was not too badly mauled by the revolution as had been thought before the war. They have stood their ground and would neither be forced to surrender nor to change their government as things stand today.

The OIC must find out anew their conditions for a ceasefire. It is the duty of this body of Islamic countries to stop the massacre of Muslims in this war.

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. -The U.S. administration's attitude toward the long-standing Iranian demand for an apology has so far been purely negative. Since the parliament is likely to add such a demand to Ayatollah Khomeini's conditions for releasing the hostages that were broadcast last month, as Speaker Hojatolislam Hashemi Rafsanjani indicated a more imaginative approach to this problem is necessary.

Washington's attitude probably reflects a misperception of the nature of the demand, which is viewed narrowly in terms of Iran's grievances painst America for its support of the regime of the late Shah and the alleged crimes of both in Iran. However, what lies behind the Iranians' demand is a deeper concern about future American attitudes and policies toward the revolution in Iran. Is the U.S. really reconciled to the existence of the revolutionary regime? Will the White House truly refrain from future political and military intervention in Iran? Once the 52 hostages are released, will Washington still resist an impulse to punish Iran? These and similar questions lie at the heart of Iranians' demand for an American apology.

Those in Iran who in making the demand express the country's moral indignation at perceived American intervention, and their supporters, hope to achieve several objectives: an ironclad American commitment to the survival of the revolution. respect for Iran's complete independence, and domestic political mobilization.

How can the U.S. address aims that underlie the Iraman demand for an American apology? For the moment, at least, the style and method of an American approach would be more important than the substance. Hence, the U.S. should be willing to declare publicly and unequivocally that upon the immediate and complete release of the bostages, it ld be prepared to conclude a long-term treaty of nonalignment and nonintervention with Iran based on the overriding principles of mutual respect, equality and interests. This method would be in keeping with the legalism favored by the Iranian political culture. Accordingly, other assurances such as U.S. Secretary of State Edmund Muskie's nonintervention pledge in his Aug. 20 letter to Iranian Prime Minister Muhammad Ali Rajai should eventually be included in such a treaty. It should not be overlooked that despite Muskie's letter, Khomeini reiterated Iran's demand for such a pledge in his recent message.

The U.S. should also declare that it would be prepared to include three additional major commitments in a treaty. First, it would undertake to recognize the revolution unambiguously. The administration's perceived reluctance to deal sympathetically with the revolutionary forces before the downfall of the Shah's regime, his refusal to abdicate, his entry into the U.S., the abortive rescue mission last April that ended in the desert -- all these have reinforced the Iranians' penchant for suspicion of American intentions and actions. America is seen as the most counter-revolutionary of the superpowers.

agreements and arrangements with prerevolutionary Iran whether or not they have already been unilaterally denounced by the new regime. Such an American willingness would signal to the Iranian authorities a determination to wipe the slate clean and place all future relations with Iran on a

And third, as an annex to the treaty, the U.S. would receive a formal statement of the new regime's case against past American policies in Iran. The U.S. would also attach a separate statement of its own views. The promise of U.S. recognition of the revolution, of political and military nonintervention, of re-examination of all pre-revolutionary agreements and arrangements with Iran, of receiving a statement of the Iranian grievances - and of sympathetic consideration of the financial terms specified by 232 Khomeini -- would be offered in return for the 🛫 immediate and complete release of the hostages. 4: Details of the proposed treaty and settlement of

Whatever the past usefulness of Washington's negative attitude toward the demand for an apology, it should be urgently reappraised. The parliament in Tehran will probably make such a demand without calling for a trial of the hostages. America must be ready for that possible eventuality.—(NYT)

Jamaica fearing military coup

By Andrew Weir

KINGSTON-Jamaica's political divisions are so sharp that people in Kingston say that if you order a Heineken beer, that can identify you as a supporter of the opposition Jamaica labor Party, and that a drinker of Red Stripe beer is thought of as a supporter of the People's National Party government. Heineken comes in a green bottle, which is the color of the JLP, and Red Stripe is close to the PNP color,

Both sides acknowledge that this election contest is the bitterest in the island's history. At one time difficult to differentiate politically, the JLP and PNP have now swung to political extremes under the pressure of severe economic difficulties.

The PNP opts for "democratic socialism" and the JLP makes clear its allegience to the private sector and the importance of foreign investment. The election was called. 14 months before the end of the government's term, to "settle and decide", in Prime Minister Michael Manley's words, the economic future of the nation after its break with the International Monetary Fund in March.

The election is due in late October or early November, according to Manley. The exact date depends on the independent electoral commission, which has yet to complete the registration of an entirely new list of voters. The commission, which is facing problems of finding scrutineers and eliminating bogus registrations, expects to finish the job

Opinion polls in April showed the JLP leading with 57 per cent to the PNP's 41 per cent, but by the next poll, published in early August, the position was: JLP 53 per cent. Observers point out that the position was similar in 1976, when, months before the election, disaffected PNP voters showed a preference for the JLP, but were won back in time for Political violence almost invariably escalates in the immediate preelection period and it seems that the relative full in August - about 31 deaths by violence as opposed to 125 in July - is coming to an end with the machinegunning of eight persons in a PNP stronghold, the largest number killed in a single incident for months.

The JLP blames members of the PNP and Cuban-trained guerrillas for much of the violence, saying that they attack their own sympathizers and blame it on the JLP. PNP members point to foreign interference in the deployment of sophisticated weapons, like M16 selfloading rifles, but neither side has any concrete evidence

What is clear from polling habits in the past is that the intimidation of voters damages the chances of the PNP most, as it gets a bigger vote on a high turn-out.

JLP leaders claim the government is attempting to "undermine" the joint policing activities of the Jamaica Constabulary Force and the 3,000-strong Jamaica Defense Force through the 1974 Suppression of Crimes. Act, under which the army was deployed in the particularly bloody month of July.

In July the act was put in force for six weeks, but from Aug. 19 and then Sept. 9 it was extended for three-week periods, with added safeguards for those searched and detained, in spite of JLP insistence that the act should stand for at least six months.

This results from deep unease in the government about the sympathy of the army's 130 Britishtrained officers toward the JLP, and complaints about frequent searches and detentions at the offices of PNP candidates.

The latter have complained of weapons being planted by soldiers and the seizing of confidential canvass lists and internal party documents. PNP activists, especially from the strife-born areas of Kingston, also charge the army and police with large-scale intimidation of their party workers.

On the last day of August a questionnaire was discovered that had been in use to find out the personal circumstances and political views of those detained by the police and army. Apparently neither the commissioner of police nor the army chief of staff, Brig. Neish, knew of it until it was brought to their attention in the press. The questionnaire, which used American spelling throughout, was then withdrawn.

Top government sources suggested to me that a military coup was a strong possibility because of extensive anti-government propagandizing among the officer corps. On Sept.2, in a little-reported speech in Kingston, Manley issued a direct warning to the security forces not to meddle in politics and respect the constitution." I don't take anything from them (the security forces) ... I give the orders. I am the prime minister of this country. You learn that."

And on Sept.22, Finance Minister Hugh Small said: There is violence because many want to see happen in Jamaica what happened in Turkey.

'Sources have independently confirmed that there is a faction in the officer corps in favor of taking political control, though they do not say how wellrepresented it is (OFNS)

Saturday's newspapers mostly led with Interior Minister Prince Naif's warning against any attempt to exploit the Pilgrimage for political propaganda. He made it clear that the pilgrims have come here "for the worship of God" and not for "political groupings" or raising the "voices of individuals" or distributing pamphlets. In a lead story, Al Jazirah reported Iraq as blaming Iran for colluding with Israel and the United States and escalating the conflict in the region. The reported strafing of Dezful area by the Iraqi rockets formed the lead story in Al Yom newspaper which further reported that Iraqi commandos have destroyed a base the former Shah of Iran had set up to confront Iraq.

In a front-page story, Al Medina quoted Agence France Press (AFP) from Beirut as saying President Qaddafi of Libya has declared his support for Iran against Iraq. Al Riyadh and Al Jazirah gave frontpage coverage to a devastating earthquake that destroyed at least 80 per cent of the Algerian town of Asnam on the Mediterranean coast, Al Jazirah reported in a page one story that secret contacts have been made between Washington and Tehran regarding the American hostages in Iran and the supply of spare parts for U.S. weapons.

Newspaper editorials highlighted the Kingdom's concern for the pilgrims and Prince Naif's reaffirmation that no political activities would be allowed during the Pilgrimage. Some papers discussed the situation in the Middle East, saying the U.N. Islamic bloc's urge to withhold the papers of the Israeli delegation is a big practical step that would pave the way for expelling Israel from the world body.

In an editorial on Prince Naif's statement, Al Medina noted that the prince's warning against any political activity during the Pilgrimage season reflects the duty of the Muslim sovereign toward his people and pilgrims from all over the world. During the past few years, the number of pilgrims has risen from hundreds of thousands to millions as a result of peaceful conditions prevailing during the performance of religious obligations, the paper said. It added that God enjoined the Pilgrimage to create direct links between Him and his creatures undisturbed by any worldly pursuits. The paper reaffirmed that protection of Islamic obligations from any alien tendency and slogans is the responsibility of this country and its leadership, and that is why the Interior Minister stressed that the state is determined to stop any such activity by force, the paper

Al Riyadh observed that God has blessed this country with the Holy Harams in Mecca and Medina, and this divine honor makes it obligatory on Saudi Arabia to render every possible service for the ease and comfort of the pilgrims to the House of God. The state serves the pilgrims selflessly and with full conviction that it has a divine-ordained responsibility toward the pilgrims, it said. The paper emphasized that the Pilgrimage must not be made to serve political ends or to raise any slogans.

but everyone must contribute his effort to maintain the serenity of the House of God. It further stressed that security and peace during the Pilgrimage is not the responsibility of the security machinery alone, but every citizen and pilgrim must consider it a joint responsibility.

On the same subject, Al Bilad noted that the Kingdom's concern for the pilgrims' services stems from a feeling of responsibility toward the Muslims of the world. Islam is a religion of peace, righteousness, justice and sublime values and principles, and Saudi Arabia persistently strives to pursue these principles in its policies in every sphere, the paper said. It added that the Kingdom mobilizes all its energy to create peaceful and comfortable conditions for the pilgrims during the performance of their religious obligations.

Al Nadwa noted in an editorial that Prince Naif was explicit in his warning against any exploitation of the Pilgrimage for political purposes. The state which strives ceaselessly to minimize the difficulties of the pilgrims feels convinced it has a right to decide what should be forbidden during the performance of the religious obligations by the pilgrims, the paper said, and hoped the pilgrims would comply with the regulations and Pilgrimage direc-

On the other hand, Al Jazirah discussed the Middle East situation and the deliberations of the U.N. General Assembly on the Palestine issue. It referred to the U.N. Islamic bloc's official move to

Tricksters snatch travellers

JEDDAH - Unsuspecting new arrivals in Jeddah often find themselves shanghaied to second-rate hotels.

The scam works this way: Businessmen arriving in the city for the first time are besieged by drivers as they leave the international arrivals building at the airport. Not all of the cabbies are legitimate. Some are not cabbies at all, but are tied-in with small hotel operators looking for business anyway they can get it.

A traveller who gets into one of the bogus cabs is liable to find himself at a small, rundown hotel off the beaten track rather than at the first class property he requests.

The driver tells his prey that he has just come from the Sheraton or the Meridien or one of the other first-class properties in town and that the hotel is sold out and turning away new arrivals. By this time, the car is in front of the second-rate property and the confused passenger is prodded into registration so as to avoid having no room at all in what he is led to believe is a sold-out city.

Here's how the scheme unfolded for one new arrival in the city.

He accepted the offer of a young man at the doorway of the terminal to take him to "any destination" in his nearby cab. The "cab" was actually a beat-up, 3-year-old Datsun parked in a pay lot in front of the domestic terminal. Despite the less-than-inviting condition of the car, the traveler got in and asked to be taken to the Al-Badr Sheraton.

After a short drive, the driver pulled up in front of a 5-story building three or four kilometers from the airport and asked for 30

"But this isn't the Sheraton," the passenger protested. "I want to go to the Shera-"Sold out," the driver countered. "I just came from there with another passenger. They wouldn't take him. Filled up. Better stay here."

Against his better judgement, the traveller checked in. While the small lobby was unprepossing but clean, the room was anything but acceptable. It was actually an efficiency apartment with a broken door latch, a naked light bulb hanging from the center of the ceiling and a dirty, stand-up kitchen. The room did have a telephone, fortunately, and the traveller put in a call to the Sheraton to check the driver's story. "Sold out? No, not at all," came the reply. "We have plenty of rooms available." With that he asked the Sheraton to send a car for him. gathered his gear together and went downstairs to check out.

Getting out of the hotel proved a lot more difficult than getting in. The desk clerk and the manager argued vigorously that the traveller couldn't leave without paying SR285 for the room.

Finally, when he saw a car pull up in front, the man picked up his bags and walked out the front door. Right behind him came the desk clerk shouting that he couldn't leave without paying.

As the traveller got into the car, he was dismayed to see the driver jump out and take on the desk clerk in a shorting match, apparently over who had "rights" to the traveller. Soon the argument turned into a shouting and pushing match.

Thoroughly alarmed, the traveller got back out and offered the clerk 50 Riyals, the last of the amount of Saudi currency he got in Britain to tide him over until he could convert currency at the hotel.

The cab driver pushed the money away from the clerk, protesting that the traveller shouldn't pay anything. And the fracas ranged on as the traveller, by now worried that the confrontation might turn more violent, waited in the car.

Suddenly, the driver broke off the argument, stuck his hand in the car, grabbed the 50 Rivals from the traveller and turned the money over to the clerk. That ended the incident and within seconds the driver was speeding off toward the Sheraton.

Five minutes later, the relieved traveller was striding toward the cashier's counter to get Riyals to pay the driver who trailed behind him.

"How much," he asked. "Fifty Riyals," the reply came back.

"That's a lot to charge for a trip from the airport," the hotel cashier interjected.

"That's okay," the relieved traveller smiled, "He carned it. I was shanghaied and he rescued me."

Postscript: how many other travellers are similarly "shanghaied" is a matter of conjecture. Probably not many. But in the week that followed, the traveller ran into three others who had the same experience. The three, members of a film crew, stayed at the smaller property even though they were suspicious of the driver's story. They found the hotel acceptable under the circumstances, but said they would not have chosen to stay there had they not been "shanghaied" there.

The moral of the story is never get in a vehicle that is obviously not a legitimate taxicab. And no matter where the driver takes you, insist that he take you to your requested destination. If your hotel is indeed sold out. the desk cierk will almost always recommend alternative facilities of a similar quality.

Healthy lunchbox can be tasty treat

By Kathy Lund

JEDDAH - Now that children are back at school again, the daily question of what to give them for lunch reappears. School lunchers are a constant challenge to mothers, requiring what seem to be mutually exclusive ingredients - food that children will eat and enjoy, but will also be nutritious.

Yet, the school lunch is a vital meal. As nutrition experts point out, good health begins in childhood, and the midday meal is probably the most important one of the day for children. The contents of the lunchbox that your child takes off to school each day need some thought if they are going to fulfil the demands that will be made on them.

Because children and teenagers are always active - and also growing rapidly - they need plenty of nutritious foods. Without the right sort of meals they will become listless, their growth may be intefered with and their general health and resistance to illness may be affected seriously.

The midday meal is important because of its timing. Breakfast should from the basis of the energy-giving foods for the day ahead. The evening meal should be sufficiently light, with easily digested foods, which will not interfere with the child's necessary restful

It is therefore the role of the lunchtime meal to make its full contribution toward the nutrients essential for proper growth and

What food should do for children is give them energy for work and play and keep bodies fit and in good running order to ensure growth to healthy adulthood. Foods that will provide energy, according to nutritionists, are cereals, bread, butter and other fats. Fruit and vegetables will provide vitamins to regulate the body functions and help build resistance to disease. And meats, fish, eggs, milk and cheese are the magic ingredients that provide materials for the growth and repair of

The suggested ideal foods for lunch are proteins - rich foods such as meat, fish, eggs and cheese; bread and butter; fresh fruit and/ or salad vegetables; and drinks of milk or fruit juice. More often than not the school lunch consists of sandwiches so the choice of bread and fillings should be given thought.

Health experts usually recommended that wholegrain cereal bread be used, although it is not always easy to buy locally. Well chosen fillings for white bread sandwiches will still be nutritious, but those wishing to use wholegrain bread may find an American variety in the freezer section of the larger supermarkets. However, be warned, it is expensive.

Fillings for bread should be chosen to provide the right nutrients, and also to balance the carbohydrates and fats contained in the bread and butter. Variety is desirable to provide interest and appetite appeal. A reasonable combination would be to have one protein-rich filling (eggs, meat) combined pethaps with salad vegetables (lettuce, tomato) and another with a sandwich spread such as peanut butter or vegetable and yeast extract, such as marmite. Dried fruits and nuts can provide interesting and tasty supplements to a lunch, either by themselves or as part of the sandwich filling.

Tasty alternatives for the lunchbox can include hard boiled eggs, wedges of cheese, thick slices of meat, cooked meatballs or salad pieces packed in individual containers with an ice cube or two to keep them cool and moist. In cooler weather hot soups, especially the home-made variety containing lots of vegetables and meat, can make an interesting and nutritious change. The lunchbox should also contain a piece of fruit each day, preferably something easy to peel, like a banana, or something the skin of which can be eaten, such as an apple or pear.

You can also add a nutritious treat to the lunchbox, something you can make yourself. The following cookie recipe contains a variety of the ingredients listed as necessary for a healthy diet such as eggs, nuts and cereals. Honey also has lots of good food value. Honey Nougat Bars Ingredients: 4 oz. butter, 1 tablespoon honey, 1 egg, 1 cup sugar, 1 cup coconut, 1 cup rolled oats, 1 cup self raising flour, 1 oz. chopped walnuts or flaked almonds.

Mix together sugar, flour, coconut and oats. Melt butter and honey. Add to dry ingredients and also mix in beaten egg. Mix well and spread into flat baking tray. Sprinkle with chopped nuts and press down. Cook approximately 30 minutes at 350 degrees. Remove from oven, cool and cut into desired

Deng gave first warning

Taiwan strains U.S.- China ties

PEKING, Oct. 11 (AFP) — During his highly successful visit to the United States early last year, Communist Chinese strongman Deng Xiaoping reportedly told President Jimmy Carter's national security adviser, Zbigniew Brzezinski, that the Sino-American normalization had triggered no opposition in China, "except in the province of Taiwan,"

Nearly two years after this sally by one of the architects of the spectacular rapprochement between Washington and Peking, the issue of Taiwan is the first serious snag to cloud the development of Sino-American relations.

An Oct. 2 agreement between Washington and Taipei granting diplomatic privileges to each other's representatives touched off a strong attack by the Chinese official press. This was later followed by formal "verbal representation" by Peking, a U.S. spokesman said.

Chinese leaders see the U.S.-Taiwan accord as a sign that Washington plans to maintain "official" ties with Taipei. These ties were broken off when Washington established diplomatic relations with Peking on Jan. 1, 1979.

The oct. 2 agreement was signed between the American Institute in Taiwan (AIT) and Taiwan's Coordination Council for North American Affairs (CCNAA), two nongovernmental bodies unofficially acting as consulates since the Sino-American normalization to supervise bilateral cultural and trade links

The Chinese media insisted that the accord, endorsed by Washington, was an "open violation" of the principles governing U.S. recognition of China.

China, according to the U.S. spokesman, has expressed "unhappiness and concern" over the matter, a stand which ironically almost parallels that of the Nationalist Chinese government, which is uneasy about Washington's cozy relationship with Peking.

In Taipei the agreement on diplomatic, privileges was : welcomed as a kind of restoration of official ties.

Both Peking and Taipei reject the principle of two Chinas." Chinese leaders blasted U.S. Republican presidential candidate Ronald Regan precisely for advocating a "two China" policy by calling for a resumption of governmental ties with the Kuomintangroled island.

When Washington broke off these ties in 1979, the Nationalist Chinese government angrily denounced the move while anti-American demonstrations were staged in Taipei. This is what Deng was referring to in his statement to Brzezinski.

U.S. Ambassador to China Leonard Woodcock has already been summoned to the foreign ministry twice this year over Taiwan. The first time he was handed a protest over U.S. delivery of arms to Taiwan while the second time Peking, reacting to statements made by Reagan on Taiwan, reaffirmed its known posture on the issue. The latest Chinese protest was delivered to U.S. Embassy counsellor Roy Stapleton.

Sino-American regations have already stumbled on the question of frozen assets in both countries since 1949 and on the conclusion of a textile agreement. These snags did not seriously affect the relationship between Washington and Peking.

But the Chinese Communist Party organ People 's Daily clearly warned that the recent Taiwan-U.S. accord was "bound to be detrimentral" to a further strengthening of Peking-Washington ties.

Soviets end longest space voyage

MOSCOW, Oct. 11 (AP) - Two Soviet cosmonauts ended the longest flight in space history Saturday and returned to earth, the Soviet news agency Tass reported.

"leonid Popov and Valery Ryumin returned to earth today after accomplishing the program of work on board the Soviet station Salyut 6," Tass said shortly before 2 p.m. Moscow time. The cosmonauts returned on their 185th day in space. They were launched from Soviet central Asia April 9.

The cosmonants "mothballed" the orbiting space lab Friday and prepared to return to earth after completing nearly six months in space. Mission director Alexei Yeliseyev was quoted as saying befor the landing that "from the viewpoint of all experts of the mission control center, the cosmonauts have worked gloriously.

They broke the world record for space endurance of 175 days and 36 minutes set a year earlier. Ryumin, an engineer who was a co-holder of the previous record and spent another two days in space before that, has spent just short of a year in space.

Tass said that the mission has already produced "several thick volumes" of scientific

Muskie hits Reagan's arms views

WASHINGTON, Oct. 11 (R) - Secretary of State Edmund Muskie, in a caustic attack on Ronald Reagan's foreign policy, Samrday criticised advocates of military superiority, abandonment of the SALT II treaty and greater resort to military force.

Muskie avoided mentioning the Republi. can presidential candidate by name in remarks at Notre Dame University in Indiana, but he left no doubt about his target. Declaring that the United States must not pretend it could recapture military superiority, as called for by the Republican party, he said, "Such superiority may sound grand in speeches. But the Soviets will no more allow us to gain such a position than we will allow it to them. A search for superiority would simply create a massive, dangerous new arms race. Peace lies in maintaining a prudent balance."

Muskie also spoke about Reagan's recent statement that he would scrap the Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty (SALT II) because it was fatally flawed.

Muskie asked rhetorically if any prudent person would want a world without the arms limitation treaty, adding that defense spending would go up by tens of billions of dollars amid heightened tensions between the two superpowers,

"I think the answer is clear. That is , why we will seek ratification of the SALT II treaty as soon as possible next year," he said.

Muskie also took a swipe at Reagan's cam-paign statements when he said U.S. forces were in the Gulf to defend the vital interests; of the United States and its allies, not to interfere in any country's domestic affairs.

Censors rejected effort to publish Milosz' writings

WARSAW, Oct. 11 (AP) - The Polish Writers' Union tried unsuccessfully in 1975 to get the censor's ban lifted on Nobel Literature prizewinner Czeslsaw Milosz' writings, a Communist Party official says.

Jerzy Putrament, vice president of the union, was quoted in a Warsaw governmentrun daily Friday as predicting the ban would be lifted soon and that anti-Communist Milosz' works would appear in Polish bookstores. Poland's state-controlled press announced the news of Milosz's selection for the 1980 prize in banner headlines Friday.

Speaking of the union's efforts, Putrament said, "At the time (the attempt) ran into objections from the propaganda hierarchy. Putrament is a member of the party central committee. "But we need not shudder any more because those propagandists are gone." "If the president's the council of state

Election to test Manley socialism allow Jamaicans to decide "which economic KINGSTON, Jamaica, Oct. 11 (Guardian)

 Jamaica's embattled prime minister, Michael Manley, announced last week that the Caribbean island's long-awaited general election would be held on Oct. 30 to give a verdict on his "democratic socialist" policies, which have troubled Washington for the past

The poll, which Manley seems likely to lose, could cap a year of success for U.S. policy in the Caribbean, where the left has been defeated electorally and otherwise in six countries. Maniey's defeat would be a welcome respite for Washington from its difficulties in Central America.

The elections, constitutionally a year early, were promised by Manley last February at the height of a dispute with the International Monetary Fund (IMF) over conditions for rescuing Jamaica's near-bankrupt economy, which recently took another battering from

Hurricane Allen. Backed by radicals in his People's National Party (PNP), he refused to agree to the IMF's demands for huge cuts in government spend-ing and said he would call an early election to compatible with the body into which it is transplanted and lessens the chances of rejection. Success with this technique has led to some 6,000 kidney transplants a year in the United States, and a smaller but growing number of transplants of bone marrow, heart and other organs.

Meanwhile, studies by Benacerraf and others have proved that the same genes involved within tissue typing affect whether a person is likely to get such common, chronic diseases as rheumatoid arthritis, multiple sclerosis and juvenile-onset diabetes.

"They (the Nobel recipients) are exemplars of the marvelous progress made in cellutar immunology," said Dr. Paul Snowden Russell, chief of transplantation at Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston.

Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center in New York, said the work of the three has led to "whole new approaches to genetic engineering and transplantation...I don't see how the prize committee could have made a better choice."

Saell's contribution was to identify a set of genes - he called them the "major histocompatibility complex' - which chiefly determine whether transplanted tissue will be rejected in the mouse.

"Histocompatibility," from the root "histo" meaning tissue, simply refers to tissues which are similar to each other.

Snell's discovery followed years of careful breeding to produce strains of mice that varied only in one or a few of these genes. His mice are still the standard tool in laboratory work in this field. Snell found that transplants usually succeed among mice with matched histocom-patibility genes, and usually fail in unmatched mice. Dausset and others found a similar histocompatibility complex on human chromosome pair No. 6. It now appears that most vertebrates have such a complex somewhere in their chromosomes. In both mice and men, the histocompatibil-ity genes determine the composition of special cell surface proteins — histocompatibility antigens — that appear on most cells in the

The immune system uses these proteins like fingerprints to distinguish "self" from "foreign" tissue, and to attack the foreign. In addition, immune cells must recognize these histocompatibility antigens to cooperate with each other in fighting disease.

There are four classes of histocompatibility antigens — A, B, C and D — and each person has two sets of each, one for each No. 6 chromosome.

Since there are 20 known variations of A, more than 40 of B. eight of C and 16 of D, the possible number of combinations is immense. It may exceed the number of humans who have ever lived.

Stroessner, the son of a German immignt has been in power since he led a coup in 354. In that time, he had exercised total slitical control and, diplomatic sources say, is amassed a fortune. Although he has publicly expressed admiition for Nazism and provided a haven for erman war criminals, his own rule has been void of ideology beyond vague expressions anti-Communism. To some, his dictatorip is a benign one - the average Paralayan is untouched by his tough attitude ward opponents — and many admire him n the economic progress, the new schools ki the work ethic he has brought to the

The personal character of his regime is en everywhere. The new airport in Asunon is named the President Stroessner Interational Airport. The nation's fastestowing city, on the border with Brazil, is ort President Stroessner, and the general's cture is everywhere in Asuncion. Perhaps est illustrating the point is a large neon sign ominating the city's central plaza. At first it ashes in small letters, Paz, Trabajo, Bienesg con - Peace, Work and Well Being with - then the lights go out, to be replaced with uge letters spelling out Stroessner.

No other person's name or face appears on osters here. The only other indication of a plitical presence of any importance is the olorado Party, an organization controlled y Stroessner and used to dispense the pat-

The sweep of the Colorado Party's - and Stroessner's - power is so extensive that nearly every person in this country of 2.9 million people is listed in computer files the party maintains in its modernistic headquarters in the center of Asuncion.

But all is not well with Stroessner. At 67, he is reportedly beginning to suffer from the problems of age. His hands and face are puffy, the result, some diplomatic sources say, of taking cortisone shots to treat arthritis. He also reportedly has a heart condition.

Paraguay is in the midst of an economic boom resulting from a joint project with Brazil to build an enormous hydroelectric plant on their frontier. But the sudden influx of money, about $250 million a year for Paraguay, is putting stresses on what had been a rudimentary, agriculture-based economy.

But the difficult problem will not come until Stroessner dies or otherwise leaves office. He has made absolutely no provision for a successor, according to diplomats and officials of his government. Stroessuer has two sons, but he has made no known plans for either of them — or anyone else — to step in behind him. The future, an opposition figure says, " will be chaos, chaos.

This prospect evidently does not concern the general." I don't plan on dying, " he told a group of foreign reporters recently.

One of the facades of democracy Stroessner has created is an official opposition that is allowed to run for the presidency and to put up candidates for the two-house national

But the opposition's presidential candidate never wins and its congressional slate, while automatically given a third of the seats in the powerless legislature, is never allowed an opportunity to take control.

Among the plums Stroessner passes out to neutralize the "opposition" are shares in what some experts say is one of the most blatant contraband operations in the world. The stores in Asuncion are crammed with goods, often available at prices below those in the countries of origin.

For instance, Paraguay is among the world's largest importers of American cigarettes. A pack of cigarettes costs less in Asuncion than in New York or Washington.

The country exports more coffee than it produces, with most of it being smuggled in from Brazil and then sold to other countries, all escaping the high Brazilian coffee tax. Imported cars are subject to a 100 per cent duty, but few are actually taxed. Although Stroessner runs a police state, there is little interference in the life of the average Praguayan. Most business is in private hands, and there are few policemen or soldiers on the streets.

Even newspapers are allowed to criticize the government as long as they avoid direct attacks on Stroessner and the military and as long as they do not mention the possibility of high-level involvement in graft.

But although Stroessner's rule appears benign in many ways, he does not allow much room for serious dissent. Opposition leaders have been arrested, beaten up, or both. The judiciary system gives no protection. "In fact, there is no judiciary system that you would recognize," a European diplomat

An Asuncion businessman seconded this riew." It isn't only a matter of the courts not protecting political rights," he said." If you have a contract dispute with a business rival, and you sue, whether you win or not depends on three things: first, what general you know, secondly, what level of contact you have in the Colorado (Party) and third, who pays the judge the most money.

STOCKHOLM, Oct. 11 (OFNS) - The Ittle was more than a little one-sided but for while it was almost as if nature was at last thing back against human incursions into Europe's last wilderness," as Sweden's far ith is billed in the tourist brochures.

A hundred or so reindeer were being rded by helicopter in a remote, mountainis area known as Kidanasfjallen in the pronce of Vasterbotten when a golden eagle cooped in with the sun behind it and tacked the mechanical intruder. On its first ass across the cockpit of the Bell-47 helicopr it startled pilot Sten Karbro and his Lapp mpanion Per Baer. "I'd never seen anying like it in my life before," said Karbro.

The eagle gained height and came in again т a second attack. Karbro and Baer atched in amazement as the bird with its x-foot wingspan closed in on them. But this me the eagle was hit by the helicopter's Nor and died instantly.

Hughes shows potato movies. And visitors will hear Louis Armstrong toot the potato head blues or hear other music about hot potatoes and others saying "potah-toes."

Hughes is particularly interested in the potato's impact on social conditions. "The potato famine in Ireland was caused by late blight, a relatively harmless fungus if detected early on. But no one did and some 28 million Irish died and a million emigrated between 1845 and 1850," he said.

The potato's introduction to Europe, he added, meant better diets and consequently, a lower mortality rate "which eventually yielded the manpower for the industrial revolution." Potatoes were discovered in South America by the Spanish conquistadores, yet for centuries many people did not know that. Hughes has an old photograph of a statue of Sir Francis Drake holding a potato flower in one hand. "The monument stood in Offenbugg, West Germany, where the people thought the Englishman had brought it to Europe," according to Hughes. The statue was destroyed by the Nazis but that was not because they cared for the origins of the potato. Hughes' head is filled with tuber trivia. A favorite story of his is about Chief Crum who worked as a cook at the Moon Lake House Hotel in Saratoga Springs, New York. "One night, in 1853, Cornelius Vanderbilt, the industrialist, came to dinner and ordered French fried potatoes, but sliced as thinly as he once had them in France. 'Insulted, the chief peeled wafer-thin potato slices which he fried and served. For years they would be called Saratoga chips. Today we call them potato chips.

Hughes can speak of his hobby almost without end. "Did Thomas Jefferson introduce French fries to America? Why do some people peel potatoes and others don't? I'd like to go to the dozen or so potato cities, lakes and creeks across the U.S. I also want to go to the South Atlantic island of Tristan da Cunha where potatoes buy stamps."

Swedish north

Karbro landed immediately after the incident and checked his aircraft for damage. He was able to continue herding the reindeer.

Ornithologist Bjorn Helander, who has made a special study of eagles in Sweden, said it was the first time he had heard of an eagle attacking an aircraft.

"They usually stay put on their nests," said Helander. "Although a golden eagle has such a tremendous wingspan it can often have trouble carrying a hare in its claws. It will tend to take the hare back to the nest in pieces

But there have been previous incidents of peregrine falcons attacking helicopters that have flown close to their nests, said nature research Professor Martin Tjernberg at the National College of Forestry.

Helicopters have become increasingly popular for herding reindeer in recent years, although recent research showed that in the process an increasing number of the animals suffer stress resulting in stomach ulcers.

Where temperatures and humidity are high, the need for airconditioning naturally increases.

The demand on power supplies goes up.

And energy costs are rising.

Dow offers a simple solution. Insulation of buildings with Styrofoam* and Roofmate* extruded polystyrene foam. This makes lighter work for air-conditioning units, so smaller installations can be specified and the risk of overloading power supplies is greatly reduced.

Both capital costs and running costs are thus significantly lowered, and reliability is improved.

And by reducing energy needs we help conserve the most vital resource of the Middle East: oil.

Which is why Styrofoam and Roofmate are both so extensively used for insulating schools, hospitals, shopping centres, cold stores, office and apartment blocks, houses and agricultural buildings.

To meet this demand, Dow now produces both these high quality products at its new plant in the Middle East.

One more example of how Dow shares the benefits of its unequalled experience in high technology worldwide with its partners in the Middle East.

And with all the people who live there.

Severe control of world food supplies foreseen

LONDON, Oct. 11 (R) - Chinese moves to purchase large quantities of U.S. grain and expected shortfalls in the harvests of the Soviet Union, Argentina and Australia will mean a severe tightening of world food supplies, agricultural experts said Saturday.

The squeeze on supplies over the next 12 months, caused mainly by bad weather in major agricultural countries, will apparently be much worse than forecast even a month ago, the experts said. This was likely to drive grain prices sharply upward in 1981 and make it more difficult for poorer developing countries to buy the food they need.

U.S. officials said Friday that China was negotiating a major purchase of American grain roughly in a range of six to nine million tons a year for the next three years. Earlier this week Soviet sources said the Soviet Union's grain harvest would probably reach

Argentina and Australia, the two major grain exporting countries in the Southern Hemisphere, also expect severely reduced wheat harvests, because of drought. ## Bonn-E. Berlin ties slump to lowest level in years

EAST BERLIN, Oct. 11 (R) - East and West Germany Saturday looked set for a long period of tense relations following East Berlin's drastic increases in the amount of hard currency it demands from Western visitors. The new minimum exchange requirements, which go into force Monday, unleashed a barrage of furious criticism in Bonn Friday and politicians from all parties joined forces in condemning the move as an attempt to stop West Germans visiting East German friends

In an official protest delivered in East Berlin, the Bonn government termed the increases the most serious blow to East-West German detente in years and demanded their withdrawal.

East Germany shrugged off the criticism and declared that the new daily exchange is equal to $13.90 quadruple the old rate for visits to East Berlin and double the levy for the rest of the country, was necessary because of inflation in the West.

9m Italians stage strike against layoffs

ROME, Oct 11, (R) — Some nine million Italians have stopped work in a four-hour general strike in protest against proposed layoffs and over fears of dismissals by the Fiat car company. Commerce and industry came to a standstill and the three big labor federations organized mass meetings and marches in all major cities. No incidents were reported.

The strike was in answer to the layoff of 22,884 employees, a fifth of Fiat's workforce, for the next three months. The fortunes of Fiat, Italy's largest private employer, are regarded as a pointer to the whole Italian economy and the unions fear the layoffs will be followed by mass dismissals.

They said Friday's stoppages would cost workers $50 million, Fiat said the industrial dispute had so far cost it $1.2 billion,.

Union leaders told a meeting in Turin, the home of Fiat, during this strike that the coming week would be decisive.

If month-old negotiations did not produce an early solution to the crisis, union plans included reinforced pickets at factory gate.

NEW YORK, Oct. 11 (AP) - George Brett wrote another chapter in the story of his fabulous season Friday night, hammering a monstrous three-run homer and propelling the Kansas City Royals into their first World Series with a three-game sweep of the New York Yankees.

The Royals ended a string of three frustrating playoff defeats at the hands of the Yankces. They'll meet the winner of the Houston-Philadelphia National League playoff in the World Series, beginning Tues-the Philadelphia Phillies Friday in the third game of the National League playoffs.

The dramatic triumph gave Houston a 2-1 lead in the best-of-five series and put them within one game of their first World Series in the team's 19-year history.

Morgan, given credit for keeping the Astros together this season, led off the 11th inning with a triple off loser Tug McGraw., Morgan, hobbled by a knee injury, then gave way to pinch runner Rafael Landestoy, who trotted home on Walling's fly ball to left fielder Greg Luzinski.

The run completed the second straight extra-inning playoff game and set a National Following Morgan's triple for the Astros, Philadelphia manager Dallas Green elected to intentionally walk Jose Cruz and pinch hitter Art Howe in order to face the left-handed hitting Walling.

Puhl gave Houston another scoring chance in the eighth inning when he singled and was sacrificed to second by Cabell. But a runsaving catch by Garry Maddox in center field and first baseman Dave Bergman's fly ball ended the inning.

Houston center fielder Cesar Cedeno hit into a double play, ending the sixth inning with runners on first and second, and suffered a broken right ankle while crossing first base. Cedeno was scheduled for surgery later Friday to repair ligament damage.

Nickro, 20-12 during the regular season, allowed six hits during his 10 innings of work but suffered from the futile run production that has plagued the Astros all season. He was replaced in the 11th by Dave Smith.

Smith, one of Houston's top relief aces all season, responded to the challenge in the 11th inning when he struck out Luzinski to open the inning. Then, after Manny Trillo flied out, Maddox doubled and Larry Bowa was walked intentionally. Smith, the winning pitcher, ended the inning by fanning pinch hitter Del Unser.

Woman confronts hunters on doves

RAPID CITY, S.D. Oct. 11 (LAT) -In an unlikely state, an unlikely woman has raised an unlikely issue likely to have many of America's hunters awaiting its outcome Nov. 4, election day. The state is South Dakota, the woman is Maggie Warren and the issue is dove hunting. She has qualified an initiative for South Dakota's November ballot that would make dove hunting illegal — and the state's hunters are positively apoplec-They see it as more than a one-state, one-species issue. Said Bill Hearne of Rapid City, a leader in the campaign to defeat the issue: "Maggie Warren has the anti-hunting groups behind her. Our view is, if she wins this campaign, what's next?

Said dove hunter Bill Phipps of Rapid City: "It's embarrassing that this is happening in South Dakota. It sounds like something that should be happening in California.'

Says Warren: "Have you ever seen a field where dove hunters have been shooting? It's horrible - dove carcasses everywhere. They just use those beautiful little birds for target practice. And after all, how much meat is on a dove? Two ounces? The rest is shot away.

"Doves are songbirds (most biologists disagree). They're good birds. They eat insects and weed seeds. They do no harm to anyone. They make a lovely sound: Hunting them is senseless slaughter."

This is Warren's second go-around with South Dakota's dove hunters. She got a similar initiative on the 1972 state ballot. To the shock of hunters, it passed easily, with a 67 per cent majority. It passed in every county.

But the state legislatore adopted and Gov. Bill Janklow signed a bill creating a 1980 dove season. The courts suspended the season and Warren began crisscrossing the state again in her dusty Lincoln. She obtained 20,000 signatures on a petition qualifying another dove initiative for

In addition, she got a state constitutional amendment proposed on the ballot that would prohibit the legislature from reversing initiative laws. Both Maggie Warren, 63, a small, feisty white-haired cattle rancher, and the committee to protect hunting, predict a close race. It's a heated contest. Warren says she's had telephone death threats. State hunting groups portray Maggie as a front woman of anti-hunting groups, and a threat to "hunters' rights."

"If you tried anything like this in Texas, they'd hang you," said Hearne. "The anti-hunters thought we'd be a soft touch again on this thing. That's why we want to

"If the anti-hunters were to gain a victory in a traditional hunting state like South Dakota they could wipe out hunting seasons in other states within a generation. It's an nati-hunting issue, not a dovehunting issue. That's why we view this as a u.:

national issue."

Said Don Hausle of Rapid City, an official of the committee to protect hunting:

Doves are hunted in 33 of the lower 48 a Mrs. states, most popuarly in the West and :... Southwest.

Maggie scoffs at her opponents' claim: .... her dove initiative will lead to campaignt to outlaw the hunting of other game, hunters hunt on my land. And I've ict duck hunters hunt here. But never dove hunters ... and as for the hunters' argument that 70 per cent of all doves die of natural causes every year, I don't believe it. If there're 500 million doves, we'd be knee-deep in dead doves. Have you ever seen a dove that died of natural causes? Ask any cowboy in South Dakota if he he's ever seen a dove that died of natural causes, and he'll tell you no."

Amin supporters invade Uganda

KAMPALA, Uganda, Oct. 11 (AP) — Ugandan soldiers loyal to ousted President Idi Amin have captured at least four towns along Uganda's border with Zaire and Sudan in a five-day-old invasion, reliable sources reported here Saturday.

Other sources at Kampala's Entebbe Airport reported troops and weapons are being airlifted in from neighboring Tanzania, which helped Ugandan exiles ousted Amin 16 months ago. However, there was no confirmation of Tanzanian support from officials of Uganda's ruling six-man military commission or any indication of casualties in the fighting.

Frequent troop movements were reported throughout the night in Kampala, but there was no immediate indication of any major move towards the northern border zones where fighting erupted Monday.

The sources, who have reached Kampala from the border zone, identified three of the fallen towns as Koboko, Amin's hometown, amd Ladonga on the Zaire frontier and Moyo near the Sudanese border.

Ugandan Foreign Minister Otema Allimadi disclosed Friday that the attackers overran a government military base at Arua, district capital of the West Nile district that is bordered by both Sudan and Zaire, and cap-

Although the Ugandan government has not identified the attackers as Amin loyalists, the sources who are widely experienced in the border region said they were former soldiers

Tens of thousands of Amin soldiers fled to Zaire and Sudan with much of their equipment, including artillery, when he was

The sources reported that tribesmen in the West Nile district have joined the invasion force. They said that many of the tribesmen are loyal to Amin and hid their weapons when the former dictator's army was defeated last year. The West Nile region is the home of three of the smallest tribes im Uganda, the Madhi, Lugbara and Kakwa. They are all closely related and tribally linked with Amin, himself a Muslim Kakwa. These factions' relations with the neighboring Langi and Acholi tribes, numerically much stronger, have always been Observers in Kampala fear that this rivalry, fanned by religious and political differences, could spark tribal warfare in the region.

The reported invasion followed weeks of sporadic violence along the borders with Zaire and Sudan. Former Ugandan President Milton Obote, who returned from exile in Tanzania last year following Amin's ouster, reported last week that Amin loyalists had seized several border posts.

The fighting escalated as Uganda, still gripped by political violence in the lingering aftermath of Amin's ouster, began to prepare for its first elections since 1962.

$25b tag put on Carter N-arms plan

WASHINGTON, Oct. 11 (WP) - The Carter administration estimates it will take nearly $25 billion over the next five years, or nearly twice as much as the government is spending now, to finance the currently planned expansion of U.S. nuclear weapons pro-

For the first time, one official said, the administration "has priced out what the president has ... ordered' in his annual nuclear stockpile report. That is the document the chief executive sings each year and allows procurement of long-lead-time items over the coming five years.

The bulk of the new funds needed will be used to pay for increased production of nuclear weapons materials, such as plutonium and tritium.

The administration has determined that long-term nuclear weapons needs cannot be met by the current output of the three production reactors now in operation at Savannah River, South Carolina.

At present, the nuclear weapons complex is producing the new Trident I submarinelaunched missile, the new Mark 12-A warhead for the Minuteman III land-based Intercontinental Ballistic Missile (ICBM), the B-61 air-dropped nuclear bomb, the Lance missile warhead, and the warhead for the new air-launched Cruise missile. In final design stages and approved for production are another new strategic air-dropped bombs, a new ground-launched Cruise missile, the Pershing II extended-range missile and a new eight-inch artillery shell.

Under design but not yet set for production are Mark 12/A warheads adapted to the proposed new MX ICBM and another larger warhead for the same missile. In addition, designed but not approved for production are two controversial nuclear warheads for the navy's Standard and Harpoon missiles. Still on the drawing board, but built into the longterm program, is the warhead for the Trident

All these weapons are to be built by a production complex that until two years ago was producing little morethan one newly designed nucealr bomb a year.

Lebanese appointed

NEW YORK, Oct. 11 - Donna Shalala, a second-generation Lebanese, is the youngest person ever to be installed as president of Hunter College.

Miss Shalala, who is 38, was installed as the 110-year-old college's 10th president Oct. 8. A native of Cleveland, Ohio, she is the daughter of James and Edna Shalala, both of whom were born in the United States. Her grandparents all came from Lebanon from the towns of Zahle and Saghbeen.

Before accepting the college presidency, Miss Shalala had worked as a peace corps volunteer in Iran and Peru, and she had worked with the Municipal Assistance Corporation in New York. She also had worked with the federal government in Washington.

Heatless winter ahead Turks face oil shortage

ANKARA, Oct. 11 (AP) - As the Iran-Iraq war drags on, Turkey faces a one-third deficit in its projected oil needs this year and another winter without heat for its citizens.

The country's energy minister, in an interview published Saturday, said present petroleum stocks were sufficient only through the first of December. He had earlier predicted supplies would last through the first of

Last year most Turks, even the well-to-do, spent as long as three months in the dead of winter with no heat except from fireplaces or tiny electric heaters. Many of them learned from the experience and bought fuel oil supplies in July but those stocks won't last the duration of this winter, economists predict.

Turkey's problem is easy to explain: - Projected oil consumption this year is set at about 17 million tons, up from 15.5 million tons last year.

 Projected oil supplies from known sources was predicted at 13.5 million tons this year, leaving a deficit of about 3.5 million tons. Last year total oil supplies were 14.6 million tons, for a deficit of less than 1 mil-

This year's predicted deficit was calculated, however, before war broke out between neighboring Iran and Iraq, which account for about 44 per cent of Turkey's oil imports.

Now that those two nations are at war and exporting no oil, Turkey has learned that all its projected 8.5 million tons from that source will not be delivered.

So far Turkey has received only 5.5 million tons from those two sources, meaning this year's already health oil deficit will increase by another 3 million tons - bringing the total shortfall to 6.5 million tons of the total projected need of 17 million.

That means that Turkey, already critically short of foreign exchange, must find large alternative supplies - probably on the expensive hard currency spot market - to survive the winter.

A month ago the country was feeling better about the coming winter because crude oil stocks were much higher than they had been going into the previous winter. But that was when supplies from Iran and Iraq were still flowing.

As the prime heating season approaches, Energy and Natural Resources Minister Serbulend Bingol said:

"At present, including stocks on hand and purchases en route to Turkey, we have 2 million tons of crude oil we hope to find 100,000 more and all that would last us until the end of November."

The squeeze brought on by the Iran-Iraq war is forcing the country to turn to Libya and the Soviet Union, where Bingol said, Turkish negotiators hope to purchase an additional 800,000 tons of crude.

That Turks will be cold again this winter. perhaps as cold as last when it was almost unbearable, seems certain. To make matters worse, the dramatic oil shortage may hurt

Authorities to punish Afghan draft evaders

NEW DELHI, Oct. 11 (AP) - Afghan youths evading conscription into their country's desertion-plagued armed forces will be punished under a new law if they do not don military uniform by Nov.7, Radio Afghanistan reported Friday night.

Defense Minister Muhammed Rafi was scheduled to address the nation later on the new amendment of Afghanistan's penal code for punishment of draft evaders.

Thousands of Afghan youths have reportedly fled the country and hundreds of thousands of others have moved from Soviet-controlled cities to insurgent strongholds. Government soldiers have been raiding houses in Kabul and some other cities at night in search of young men to enlist in the army, travelers recently arriving from their homeland said here.

The strength of the Afghan army has reportedly fallen to around 30,000 from more than 80,000 at the time of the Soviet military intervention last December. Meanwhile, army units "liquidated" Muslim insurgent groups in Meezan and Jaldak districts in the northwestern province of Faryab, Afghan government radio reported.

already crippled industrial enterprises even more. They had just begun production increases after the Sept. 12 coup.

Heating houses and shops in Turkey consumes only 6.5 per cent of all the country's oil. Industry takes nearly 40 per cent. The effects of the deficit should, therefore, hit hardest in the industrial sector where unemployment already is at 20 per cent.

Politics out for Rajiv, mother says

NEW DELHI, Oct. 11 (AP) - Prime Minister Indira Gandhi on Saturday quashed talk of her elder son, Rajiv, entering politics to fill the vacuum created by the June air crash death of her politically influential younger son Sanjay.

is not joining politics." Mrs. Gandbi told reporters in Bombay, the United News of India reported.

Mrs. Gandhi's remarks came after A.R. Antulay, chief minister of the western state of Maharaehtga, handed her an appeal urging her to persuade Rajiv to join politics. The plea was signed by a number of legislators belongings to the ruling Congress Party, UNI

"I do not think signatures make any difference," the 62-year-old leader declared.

Her remarks ended months of speculation about a political role for Rajiv, 37, who lived most of his life in the shadow of his controversial younger brother. It also meant that Raiiv had successfully resisted efforts by Sanjay's followers to draft him into India's turbulent domestic politics.

Rajiv, a pilot with Indian Airlines, the domestic carrier, left New Delhi last week for Hyderabad, southern India, to train as a commercial jet co-pilot. He is already a commercial pilot with Indian Airlines but flies only piston-driven aircraft.

The soft-spoken Rajiv told interviewers in August that although he was not interested in a government post, he wanted to help his mother and "the best way was to be a sort of communication medium to her.".

The father of two children, Rajiv is married to an Italian woman, the former Sonia Mainto of Turin, whom he met while a student at Cambridge, in Britain. He said she is opposed to his entry into politics.

Sanjay died earlier this year when a plane he was piloting crashed during a stunt manenver. He had recruited a large following by use of guile and charm, and his supporters occupied many seats in the national assembly. During the latter part of his political career some observers noted that Sanjay's popularity might be eclipsing that of his mother. They suggested she would have to give him more power or face the possibility of him becoming a rival.

Travel writers get chilly welcome from Polish police

WARSAW, Oct. 11 (LAT) - Like many other American tourists in Poland, Larry Mayran of Los Angeles set off to find his family roots in a rural village. Instead, he found a rare example of police nervousness

Mayran and three other members of the Society of American Travel Writers, visiting on a 10-day tour heavily subsidized by the Polish government, left their group to visit a village in northeast Poland, 200 km from

"My father had told me how Grajewo was the last stop for the train, and from there he had to walk seven kilometers to his own small village of Tzepki," he said.

The four tourists rented a car and drove to the train station in Grajewo. "Just as we arrived, this wonderful old steam train pulled in. We must have taken about 30 minutes of pictures when I noticed one of my friends being taken to a police car,"

Mayran said

Mayran, who operates a marketing company and is a free-lance writer, was taken into custody along with Jennifer Quale of Boston, Mark Michaelson of Chicago and Colin Macdonal of Toronto. They were held in the town jail for 4 ½ hours.

Blocked from making any telephone calls to the U.S. Embassy in Warsaw or to their Polish hosts, the Orbis Travel Co. and Interpress news agency, the four were unable to answer questions until a local musician was produced to translate.

Mayran was taken to an interrogation room and asked why he was in the area and why he was taking pictures.

"There wasn't anything physical about it, but they wouldn't do anything we asked. wouldn't give us any coffee or anything and it was very cold," he said.

After 4 1/2 hours, the police returned their cameras and let the four go. The visitors drove back to Warsaw without finishing the trip to Tzepki and rejoined the other travel writers in Krakow on Sunday.

Mayran said the Polish hosts had failed to warn the visitors about the local law, common in Communist countries, that prohibits photos of sensitive spots such as train stations, harbors and airports.

With thousands of Polish-Americans visiting each year without police incidents, the travel writers considered it ironic that they should be arrested just as the government is trying especially hard to attract more tourists.

The travel writers, who are holding their convention in Warsaw, each paid only $500 for round-trip transportation, lodging and meals, and the best accommodations the country offers. One American diplomat estimated the price was only 10 per cent of the actual cost of each visitor's trip.

"Up until now, everything has been just wonderful." Macdonal said "This puts a damper on the whole affair."
